Story

A once-peaceful city now stands filled with the stench of evil. Was it long, long ago or just yesterday that the evil god Bios began his destruction of all civilizations? People of this city ran through the blazing fires of destruction, as a single eye sneered down at their misery. It was not long ago that this eye turned, with its glimmer of evil light, towards this once powerful city and proud people. The city fought to the last of its strength, but the shadow of death darkened the once-bright streets. Bios could not be withstood. Who would imagine that today's Dust World was what became of that great city? Who could believe that the low, chilling moans of sorrow and agony still haunt the dark city. "How long are we going to stay like this?" "Who knows?" The two men's shadows on the barren mountainside were suddenly covered by a third, the shadow of a girl. "Please save this city, this world. Please save us!" Her hands were clasped as if in prayer. Her tear-filled eyes were pleading. "People have lost their dreams. They have lost all hope. But you, you could become our hope. Please..." The men looked into her face, then at each other. Neither uttered a word of denial. Both saw the desperation in the girl's eyes. Both wanted to help. But how should they take the first steps? "I know you have the power to bring about Bios' end."

It was then her shadow seemed to waver. A strong gust of wind enveloped the three figures. When the men opened their eyes, the girl was nowhere to be seen. The only thing remaining was her voice echoing inside the men's heads. "... you can bring about Bios' end." They reached for their weapons. "Ready?" "Right." And they stood up.
